April RFP posted for Strategic Plan Facilitation

May Draft response to question North Carolina: Nora Poisella, DMA Policy Nurse Consultant: DMA's Pharmacy & Therapeutics committee seeks input from the schools regarding a Medicaid decision that would make the injectable epinephrine medication Twinject preferred over EpiPen. It would mean considerable cost savings for Medicaid and Twinject and EpiPen are both similar products both being the same strengths of injectable epinephrine. The committee is looking for an official statement from schools. Let me know any issues or negative effects you think it may have on schools. Response: The School Health Unit does not support DMA's proposal to make Twinject auto-injector preferred over EpiPen auto injector for school use. Rationale: The risk of needle stick injury to a staff person or another student is high with use of Twinject as compared to use of EpiPen. EpiPen is a single use auto injector with a fully retractable needle. It is automated, only a plastic cap is removed from the area in which the needle is encased but the needle is not exposed before or after use, only once pressed against a person's body does the needle eject the medication and then retracts. The only risk of needle exposure would be if used incorrectly, which might happen if the device is pressed against the body but removed before the medication is fully dispensed. The injection is so fast that such an event is unlikely. Jessica Gerdes (NC) posted on listserv.
